INSTRUCTOR BIO

Dennis Landfather, MBA

Founder, Evolve Pathfinder

Dennis Landfather is a strategic business coach and consultant with deep experience in the architecture, engineering, and construction industry. As founder of Evolve Pathfinder, he helps firms align vision, people, and culture with sound business practices, focusing on solutions to challenges like profitability, talent retention, technology adoption, and client strategy.

ABOUT THIS COURSE

Architecture firms today face pressure from every direction: shrinking fees, high turnover, technology overload, market instability, and clients who aren't always a fit. This session will walk participants through five of the most pressing challenges affecting firms right now. Using real-world examples, we'll explore practical solutions rooted in strategy, people alignment, cultural strength, and sound business practices. Attendees will leave with actionable insights they can immediately take back to their teams.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

1. Identify five current challenges impacting architecture firms: fee pressure, talent retention, technology overwhelm, economic uncertainty, and poor client fit.
2. Evaluate practical strategies that improve profitability and reduce scope creep through stronger business practices.
3. Apply cultural and people-alignment tools to address burnout, retention, and client relationship management.
4. Develop a framework for technology adoption and strategic resilience that aligns with firm culture and long-term vision.

One of the highlights of the 2025 Chattanooga GSR conference was the Tivoli Theatre renovation presentation and building tour led by Michael Schnoering, the architect of record for the renovation. A lesser-known trivia item is that a live playhouse theatre is spelled with an "RE" and has British "roots", while a movie cinema theater is spelled with an "ER" and has American "roots".

The Tivoli Theatre, known as the "Jewel of the South," opened in March 1921. It was one of the first air-conditioned buildings in the United States and was named after Tivoli, Italy. The building features prominent cream tiles and terracotta bricks throughout its structure. Like many theatres built during that era, it houses a circa 1931 Mighty Wurlitzer pipe organ, which provided live music for silent films and theatrical productions.

The theatre is designed in the Beaux Arts architectural style, similar to the Tennessee Theatre located in Knoxville. Inside, the theatre includes a rose and gold coffered ceiling, while the lobby features a white terrazzo floor accented with forest green marble and decorative medallions. Upon its opening in 1921, the Tivoli Theatre showcased the film "Forbidden Fruit" by Cecil B. DeMille, with admission prices ranging from 15 to 55 cents. The building was added to the National Historic Register in 1973.

Michael Schnoering began the renovation discussion by providing some historical background on the site, which included "sand boring" maps of the building area. The structure now known as the Tivoli Theatre originally did not encompass the two adjacent buildings, which are referred to as the RH Hunt, it consisted only of the lobby, seating, and stage areas. Michael detailed the construction of the adjacent buildings, which was originally a furniture store. In 1926, five Carrier air conditioning units were installed in the theatre. Willis Carrier was the HVAC engineer who played a crucial role in making air conditioning a common feature in commercial buildings.

The theatre tour began in the lobby and continued through the auditorium, including stops at the stage, wings, and loading dock. The lobby featured several interesting architectural elements, such as two round wall recess located on each side of the lobby.

In the auditorium, also known as the "house," there were new seating samples temporarily installed for review.

ORIGINAL AUDITORIUM SEATING AND BALCONY; NOTE THE CONTROL BOOTH AND MOVIE PROJECTOR ROOM ABOVE THE BALCONY SEATING ALONG WITH THE THEATRE LIGHTING COVE IN THE CEILING ELLIPSE

As someone with a background in theatre technology and mechanical design, I noticed that the chilled water and heating water piping for the HVAC units is routed through the theatre "wings".

One common issue in many theatres is the "wind effect" caused by the stage HVAC unit blowing air on the theatrical curtains. This airflow can cause the curtains to move, resulting in unintentional shadows created by the shifting fabric in front of the stage lighting. Additionally, it is undesirable for the backdrops and cycloramas to "ripple in the wind" during a performance. The fire sprinkler system included a proscenium opening deluge system designed to protect and separate the audience seating area from the stage. There have been several historical fires in theatres where ignition occurred on stage, causing the flames to spread into the audience and resulting in significant fatalities.
