Resilient and Adaptable Roof System Design 1 LU | HSW

The roof system is a critical component in ensuring a building's overall resilience, which is defined by its ability to endure significant weather events and maintain functionality afterward. While a roof's primary function is to protect a building from daily weather, there's a growing demand for enhanced resilience. This presentation will explore the key principles of designing new resilient roof systems and strategies for upgrading existing ones. Learn about material selection and system design, gaining knowledge for creating roof systems that offer superior protection, minimize post-event disruption, and contribute to the overall long-term viability of buildings facing increasingly unpredictable weather patterns.
